A study on the Impact of domestic violence on children

West Bengal Commission for Protection of Child Rights

Location: West Bengal

Apply by: 15th May, 2018

Background of the study:

Children living with domestic violence grow up in an environment of fear, anxiety and tension. It can lead to significant emotional and psychological trauma.

Instead of growing up in an emotionally and physically safe, secured, nurturing environment, these children are forced to worry about the future; they tend to predict when it might happen next and try to protect themselves and their siblings.

Most of the times, domestic violence is seen as the violation of women's rights, but the issue of rights of child are often not prioritized. Domestic Violence affects right to education, right to have good physical and mental health, right to be protected from neglect, rejection, desertion, right to have proper nutritious food and freedom of movement.

So, it seems that the incidence of violence affects both women and children but in a different manner. It denies the rights of women, children and in a nutshell rights of human.

Considering the situation the West Bengal Commission for Protection of Child Rights would like to conduct a study on the Impact of domestic violence on children.

Objectives of the study:

- To understand the extent of the problem
- To know the social, physical and emotional impact on children who are exposed to domestic violence
- To know how the basic rights of children are being violated
- To analyse the role of stakeholders
- To formulate a set of recommendations to mitigate the problem

Current Assignment:

The study time frame is between July 2018 and February 2019. It will include data collection, data analysis, and finalisation of the study report along with recommendations and dissemination of findings.

WBCPCR invites applications from the agencies/individuals to carry out the in-depth qualitative study with the high quality reports.
